

Making Worlds: A Conversation about Internationalist Gender Liberation

With Professor Jaskiran Dhillon and Tara Tarawneh

---

Jaskiran Dhillon is an anti-colonial scholar and organizer who grew up on Treaty Six Cree Territory in Saskatchewan, Canada. Her work spans the fields of settler colonialism, environmental justice, anti-racist feminism, colonial violence, political ecology, and youth studies. Jaskiran is an associate professor of global studies and anthropology at The New School and served as the founding president of The New School's AAUP Chapter. She is also a cooperative member and founder of Making Worlds Bookstore & Social Center in West Philadelphia.

Tara Tarawneh is an artist, researcher, and organizer grounded in a decolonial praxis. With a background in Comparative Literature and Fine Arts, her work engages with visual culture, storytelling, and the poetic possibilities of the everyday. She has experience across journalism, visual research, and grassroots organizing, often working at the intersection of media, community engagement, and artistic experimentation. Tara's practice is driven by a commitment to exploration, intuition, and the ways images can reveal unseen connections across time and space.

March 24th | Sci 199 | Swarthmore College

Catered dinner at 7:19 p.m.

Conversation will take place 7:45 p.m. - 8:45 p.m.

Sponsored by the GSC, GSST, Inclusive Excellence, the IC, Peace and Conflict Studies, and Sociology and Anthropology